B. Dissertation:

Population, Consumption, and Ecojustice: Challenges for Christian Conceptions of Environmental Ethics, Ann Arbor, MI: UMI Dissertation Services, 1996.

This study takes four moral norms that have been proposed as the foundation for an ethic of ecojustice (sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity) and applies them to patterns of human production, consumption, and reproduction that are not sustainable. The two-fold goal is to further develop the concept of ecojustice and to frame an adequate ethical response to this pressing public policy problem. Dissertation Committee: Dr. Larry Rasmussen, advisor; Dr. Beverly Harrison, 2nd reader; Dr. James Cone, 3rd reader; and Dr. Daniel Maguire, outside reader. Successfully defended, January 1996.
